If someone you love has had cancer, you will know that all you can really do for them is to make their life as easy as possible. Perhaps you get in the habit, but following my husband John's death, from acute myeloid leukaemia, I volunteered to work at the Great Western Hospital and Brighter Futures, where he had been treated. This gave me purpose in life and I hope I have been able to help some of the cancer patients, when they are receiving chemotherapy, as much as they have helped me cope with my life.
